

Anti-Harassment & Discrimination Policy

This policy covers prohibited harassment and discrimination, employee responsibilities, reporting channels, complaint handling, and protection against retaliation in the workplace.

6.1 Prohibited Discrimination. Employees must not discriminate against another employee, applicant, customer, or other individual in connection with company activities. Prohibited discrimination includes unfair treatment based on characteristics protected by applicable law or company policy.

6.2 Workplace Harassment. Harassment, including verbal, physical, visual, or written conduct that violates applicable law or company policy, is prohibited. Employees must not engage in conduct that creates an intimidating, hostile, humiliating, or offensive working environment.

6.3 Sexual Harassment. Unwelcome sexual advances, requests for sexual favors, sexually explicit comments, or other unwelcome sexual conduct are prohibited. Conduct may violate this policy whether it occurs in person, through company communication systems, or during company-related events.

6.4 Verbal and Written Conduct. Employees must not use threatening, degrading, insulting, or discriminatory language toward coworkers or other individuals in connection with their work. This requirement applies to workplace conversations, company email, messaging systems, and other company communication channels.

6.5 Physical Conduct. Unwanted physical contact, threats of physical harm, intimidation, or other inappropriate physical conduct are prohibited in company workplaces and during company-sponsored activities.

6.6 Reporting to Management. Employees who experience or observe conduct that may violate this policy may report the concern to their manager or the Human Resources department. Reports should be made as soon as reasonably possible after the employee becomes aware of the concern.

6.7 Human Resources Reporting Channel. Employees may submit harassment or discrimination complaints directly to Human Resources without first reporting the matter to their immediate manager. Human Resources will document the complaint and determine the appropriate review process.

6.8 Confidential Reporting. Employees who are uncomfortable reporting a concern through management or Human Resources may use the company's designated confidential reporting channel. Confidentiality cannot be guaranteed in every investigation because information may need to be shared to review and address a complaint.

6.9 Investigation Process. Reported concerns will be reviewed through an appropriate investigation or fact-finding process. Employees involved in an investigation are expected to cooperate and provide accurate information when requested.

6.10 Protection Against Retaliation. Retaliation against an employee for making a good-faith report, participating in an investigation, or raising a concern under this policy is prohibited. Employees who believe they have experienced retaliation should report the concern through Human Resources or the designated reporting channel.

6.11 False or Misleading Reports. Employees are expected to provide information honestly when making or participating in a complaint. Knowingly providing materially false information during an investigation may result in disciplinary review.

6.12 Workplace Events and Remote Work. This policy applies to conduct occurring at company offices, company-sponsored events, business travel, and company communication or collaboration systems used for work. Remote work does not exempt an employee from the requirements of this policy.

6.13 Manager Responsibilities. Managers who receive a complaint or become aware of conduct that may violate this policy must promptly refer the matter through the designated reporting process. Managers must not discourage an employee from reporting a concern.

6.14 Policy Compliance. Employees are responsible for following this policy and cooperating with authorized investigations. Violations may result in corrective or disciplinary action in accordance with applicable company procedures.
