

Offboarding & Exit Policy

This policy covers employee resignation notice periods, exit clearance requirements, return of company property, access termination, and the timeline for final settlement after employment ends.

10.1 Resignation Notice Period. Employees who voluntarily resign must provide written notice to their manager and Human Resources. The standard resignation notice period is 30 calendar days unless the employee's employment agreement specifies a different period.

10.2 Probationary Notice Period. Employees who resign during their probationary period must provide 14 calendar days of written notice unless a different requirement is specified in their employment agreement.

10.3 Notice Submission. A resignation becomes effective when the written resignation is received by the employee's manager or Human Resources. The resignation should include the employee's intended final working date.

10.4 Notice Period Changes. A manager may approve a shorter notice period when operational circumstances permit. An employee must not assume that a shorter notice period has been approved without written confirmation.

10.5 Handover Responsibilities. During the notice period, employees are expected to complete assigned work, document important procedures, and transfer relevant responsibilities to the designated employee or manager.

10.6 Exit Clearance. Employees must complete the required exit-clearance process before their final working day. Clearance may include confirmation from Human Resources, IT, Finance, Facilities, and other departments with responsibility for company property or outstanding obligations.

10.7 Company Equipment Return. All company-issued equipment, including laptops, monitors, headsets, mobile devices, access cards, and other assigned property, must be returned in working condition within 5 business days of the employee's last working day unless IT or another authorized department provides different instructions.

10.8 Access Termination. Company system access should be disabled in accordance with the employee's final working date and applicable security procedures. Employees must not retain or use company accounts after their employment has ended.

10.9 Confidential Information. Employees must return or delete company information from unauthorized personal locations and must continue to protect confidential information after leaving the company when applicable obligations survive termination.

10.10 Outstanding Expenses. Employees must submit eligible outstanding business expenses and supporting receipts before their final working day whenever practicable. Expenses submitted after departure may be processed according to the applicable expense procedures.

10.11 Final Settlement. Final salary, approved outstanding expenses, applicable accrued amounts, and other required settlement items should normally be processed within 15 business days after the employee's last working day, subject to completion of required payroll and clearance procedures.

10.12 Clearance Delays. When required company property has not been returned or required clearance information remains incomplete, processing of certain settlement items may be delayed to the extent permitted by applicable procedures and law.

10.13 Exit Interview. Human Resources may request an exit interview before or after the employee's final working day. Employees may provide feedback regarding their work experience, management, workplace practices, and reasons for leaving.

10.14 Employment Records. Human Resources is responsible for updating the employee's employment record and maintaining required exit documentation in accordance with applicable record-retention requirements.

10.15 Final Confirmation. The employee's final working date, completion of required clearance, return of company property, and completion of applicable settlement procedures should be documented by the responsible departments.

10.16 Policy Compliance. Employees and responsible departments must follow the applicable offboarding procedures and timelines. Exceptions to the standard process require approval from the appropriate manager or Human Resources.