

Onboarding Policy

This policy covers the required steps, documentation, account setup, equipment provisioning, orientation, and timeline for setting up new employees.

9.1 Pre-Employment Documentation. New employees must provide the required employment and identification documents before or on their first working day. Required documentation may include proof of identity, employment forms, tax documentation, emergency contact information, and other documents specified by Human Resources.

9.2 HR Registration. Human Resources must create the employee's personnel record and enter the required employment information into the designated HR system. The employee's department, position, manager, employment start date, and work arrangement should be recorded during the onboarding process.

9.3 First-Day Orientation. New employees must complete the initial onboarding orientation on their first working day unless an alternative schedule has been approved. The orientation covers workplace procedures, applicable policies, organizational expectations, and basic administrative requirements.

9.4 Employee Accounts. Required company accounts should normally be requested on or before the employee's first working day. Access should be limited to the systems and information necessary for the employee's assigned responsibilities.

9.5 IT Equipment. New full-time employees receive standard company equipment in accordance with the IT Equipment and Support Policy. Equipment that is not part of the standard issue package requires the applicable approval before it is provided.

9.6 Equipment Assignment. Employees receiving company equipment must acknowledge receipt through the designated IT or asset-management process. The equipment record should include the assigned employee, equipment identification information, and assignment date.

9.7 Security Setup. New employees must complete required account-security procedures before accessing systems containing company information. This may include password setup, multi-factor authentication, security training, and other controls required by IT.

9.8 Department Introduction. The employee's manager should introduce the employee to the relevant team members and explain the employee's primary responsibilities, reporting structure, work schedule, and initial priorities.

9.9 Required Training. New employees must complete mandatory onboarding training within the applicable training period. Required training may include information security, workplace conduct, confidentiality, safety, and other training relevant to the employee's role.

9.10 First-Week Completion. The employee should complete the core onboarding requirements within the first 5 business days of employment unless a specific requirement has a different deadline.

9.11 Thirty-Day Review. The manager should conduct an initial onboarding review approximately 30 calendar days after the employee's start date. The review may be used to identify unresolved access issues, training requirements, role clarification, or other onboarding needs.

9.12 Missing Documentation. When required documentation is incomplete, Human Resources may request the missing information from the employee. Certain administrative or system-access activities may remain pending until required documentation has been provided.

9.13 Remote Employee Onboarding. Employees approved to work remotely may complete onboarding activities electronically when an in-person activity is not required. Remote onboarding does not remove the employee's obligation to complete required documentation, training, security procedures, or equipment acknowledgment.

9.14 Onboarding Responsibilities. Human Resources is responsible for coordinating employment documentation and administrative setup. IT is responsible for approved account and equipment setup, while the employee's manager is responsible for role-specific orientation and initial work assignments.

9.15 Onboarding Completion. Onboarding is considered complete when the required HR documentation, system access, equipment assignment, mandatory training, and department-specific setup have been completed or formally recorded as pending.

9.16 Policy Compliance. New employees and responsible departments must complete onboarding requirements within the applicable timelines. Exceptions to the standard onboarding process require approval from the appropriate department or Human Resources.
