

Overtime Policy

This policy covers employee eligibility for overtime work, approval requirements, recording of overtime hours, and compensation for approved overtime work.

11.1 Overtime Eligibility. Employees whose positions are designated as eligible for overtime may receive overtime compensation for hours worked beyond their standard scheduled hours when the overtime has been properly authorized and recorded. Employees classified as exempt from overtime are not eligible for overtime compensation under this policy.

11.2 Standard Working Hours. The standard full-time work schedule is 40 hours per week unless the employee's employment agreement or applicable department schedule specifies a different arrangement. Hours worked during the employee's normal schedule do not constitute overtime solely because they occur outside the employee's preferred working time.

11.3 Overtime Approval. Employees must obtain manager approval before working overtime whenever reasonably practicable. Employees must not intentionally work additional hours without authorization with the expectation that the additional hours will automatically qualify for overtime compensation.

11.4 Emergency Overtime. When an urgent operational or technical situation requires immediate work and advance approval is not reasonably possible, an eligible employee may work the required additional hours and must notify their manager as soon as reasonably practicable.

11.5 Overtime Rate. Approved overtime worked by eligible employees is compensated at 1.5 times the employee's regular hourly rate unless a different rate is required by an applicable employment agreement or governing requirement.

11.6 Weekend Overtime. Approved overtime performed on a scheduled weekend is compensated at the applicable overtime rate. Weekend work does not automatically qualify for a higher rate unless a separate compensation rule applies.

11.7 Holiday Overtime. Work performed on a designated company holiday may be subject to a separate holiday compensation rule. Employees should obtain confirmation from Human Resources or Payroll before working on a holiday when compensation treatment is unclear.

11.8 Overtime Recording. Employees must accurately record the date, start time, end time, and total hours worked for each overtime period through the designated timekeeping system.

11.9 Weekly Overtime Threshold. For employees whose standard schedule is 40 hours per week, hours worked beyond 40 hours in the applicable workweek may qualify as overtime when the employee is eligible and the additional work has been approved.

11.10 Manager Responsibilities. Managers are responsible for reviewing overtime requests, confirming that additional work is necessary, and ensuring that approved overtime is accurately recorded for payroll processing.

11.11 Unapproved Overtime. Employees should not perform recurring or planned overtime without prior approval. Where an eligible employee performs additional work without obtaining required approval, the employee must report the hours accurately and the organization will determine the applicable treatment under its procedures.

11.12 Remote and Hybrid Employees. Employees working under a remote or hybrid arrangement are subject to the same overtime eligibility and approval requirements as employees working from an organizational office. Working remotely does not independently create entitlement to overtime compensation.

11.13 Overtime During Probation. Employees in their probationary period may be eligible for overtime when their position is designated as overtime-eligible and the overtime has been properly approved and recorded.

11.14 Payroll Processing. Approved overtime hours should normally be submitted through the designated timekeeping system before the payroll cutoff for the applicable pay period. Overtime submitted after the cutoff may be processed in the following payroll cycle.

11.15 Overtime Limits. Managers should monitor overtime to prevent excessive working hours and should obtain additional approval when an employee is expected to work more than 10 overtime hours in a single workweek.

11.16 Policy Compliance. Employees and managers are responsible for accurately recording and approving overtime. Deliberately misreporting working hours or repeatedly bypassing the required approval process may result in disciplinary review.
