

Probation Policy

This policy covers the probationary period for new hires, performance evaluation criteria, probation extensions, and the process for confirming employees after successful completion of probation.

8.1 Probation Period. All newly hired full-time employees are subject to a standard probationary period of 90 calendar days beginning on their employment start date. The probationary period is used to evaluate the employee's suitability for the position and does not automatically result in confirmation.

8.2 Probation Evaluation. During probation, employees are evaluated based on job performance, quality of work, attendance, punctuality, communication, conduct, and ability to perform the responsibilities associated with their position.

8.3 Initial Evaluation. The employee's manager should conduct an initial performance review after approximately 30 calendar days. The review may identify performance gaps, training requirements, or other areas requiring improvement before the end of probation.

8.4 Mid-Probation Review. A second evaluation should normally take place around the 60th calendar day of probation. Managers may provide written or verbal feedback regarding progress toward the expectations of the position.

8.5 Final Probation Evaluation. Before the end of the 90-day probationary period, the manager must evaluate the employee's overall performance and provide a recommendation regarding confirmation, extension, or termination of employment in accordance with applicable procedures.

8.6 Confirmation of Employment. An employee who successfully satisfies the applicable performance and conduct requirements may be confirmed as a regular employee after completion of the probationary period. Confirmation must be documented through the designated HR process.

8.7 Probation Extension. When additional time is required to evaluate an employee's performance, probation may be extended for up to 30 calendar days with manager and HR approval. The employee should be informed of the extension before the original probation period expires.

8.8 Performance Improvement During Probation. When an employee does not meet one or more expected performance standards, the manager may identify specific improvement requirements and provide appropriate guidance or training. Additional review may be conducted before a final confirmation decision is made.

8.9 Attendance During Probation. Employees are expected to maintain regular attendance and follow their approved work schedules during probation. Excessive unapproved absence or repeated lateness may be considered during the probation evaluation.

8.10 Remote Work During Probation. Employees in their probationary period are not automatically eligible for a regular remote or hybrid work arrangement. Remote work during probation requires manager approval and must comply with the applicable Remote & Hybrid Work Policy.

8.11 Confirmation Documentation. HR should record the employee's confirmation, probation extension, or other final employment decision in the employee's personnel record. Verbal statements by coworkers or team members do not constitute formal confirmation.

8.12 Early Confirmation. An employee may be considered for confirmation before completing the full 90-day probationary period when the manager determines that sufficient performance evidence is available and HR approves the early confirmation.

8.13 Probationary Review Deadline. Managers should submit the final probation evaluation to HR no later than 5 business days before the scheduled end of the probationary period whenever practicable.

8.14 Policy Compliance. Managers and HR representatives are responsible for following the applicable probation procedures and maintaining appropriate evaluation records. Completion of the probationary period alone does not constitute confirmation unless the required confirmation process has been completed.