

Remote & Hybrid Work Policy

This policy covers employee eligibility for remote and hybrid work, expected in-office attendance, temporary remote arrangements, and equipment provisioning for employees working remotely.

4.1 Remote Work Eligibility. Full-time employees whose positions are designated as remote-eligible may request a regular remote or hybrid work arrangement after completing 90 calendar days of employment. Employees in their initial probationary period require specific manager approval before working remotely.

4.2 Hybrid Work Schedule. Employees approved for the standard hybrid arrangement are expected to work from the office at least 2 days per week and may work remotely for up to 3 days per week. Managers may designate specific in-office days when team coordination requires common attendance.

4.3 Increased Office Attendance. Certain positions may require employees to work from the office 3 or 4 days per week when their responsibilities require physical collaboration, access to restricted equipment, supervision, or customer interaction.

4.4 Fully Remote Employees. Employees approved as fully remote are not required to maintain the standard 2-day weekly office schedule. However, they may be required to attend approved in-person meetings, training sessions, or organizational events.

4.5 Temporary Remote Work. Employees may request temporary remote work for a specific circumstance. Temporary remote work must normally be approved before the employee works from an alternative location. Temporary remote work lasting more than 10 consecutive business days requires HR review.

4.6 Remote Work Location. Employees must normally work from their approved remote-work location. Working temporarily from another city or country requires approval when the change may affect security, working hours, legal requirements, or operational availability.

4.7 Standard Remote Equipment. Employees approved for regular remote work may receive an organization-managed laptop, one monitor, keyboard, mouse, and headset when required by their role. Equipment provisioning depends on role requirements and available organizational resources.

4.8 Additional Equipment. Additional monitors, peripherals, or other equipment may be requested when justified by an employee's responsibilities. Additional equipment costing more than $300 requires manager approval and may require IT or procurement review.

4.9 Equipment Return. Employees must return organization-issued equipment in working condition within 10 business days of their last working day unless IT provides different instructions.

4.10 Remote Work Approval. Employees requesting a change from office-based work to a regular hybrid or remote arrangement should submit the request at least 10 business days before the requested effective date. Approval is based on the employee's role, performance, operational requirements, and team needs.

4.11 Working Hours. Remote and hybrid employees must remain available during their scheduled working hours and must meet the same attendance and performance requirements that apply when working from the office.

4.12 Policy Exceptions. Exceptions to the standard remote and hybrid work requirements require appropriate management approval and, where specified, HR approval. An exception granted to one employee does not automatically apply to other employees.
